

Satellite radio is one of the most interesting, compelling and enjoyable innovations in the entertainment world. The business addresses the concerns and problems that regular radio ignores. XM Radio provides me with the quality and varying spectrum of music, news, shows, and entertainment that I am looking for in radio, without the awful commercials. I pay for this service as one pays for cable television, and I do not want to see an enterprise such as this one be subject to the frightened legislation that backs an outdated public radio conglomerate. XM provides weather and traffic and all of its services in a way that is truly useful and reliable and better than any other radio programming ever has.

Satellite radio is the future of radio, and should be allowed to continue being an innovator. Change can be difficult, but when change brings a better standard, better quality and happiness, it should not be regulated to its detriment by a conglomerate that has no ground for doing so.
